

Should Students Wear Uniforms to School?

Chen, Ying-rong

Since the haircut regulation was lifted, the controversial issue of whether students should wear uniforms to school has been discussed. Some people think it is unnecessary for students to wear uniforms, because uniforms seems to be useless, ugly, and a form of bondage for students, who are free citizens in this country. However, although uniforms will be abandoned after students graduate, it does itself justice when students are in school. Uniforms provide several benefits that can relieve students from worrying about their clothing, let them be more recognizable, and make them united.

If students wear uniforms to school everyday, they don't need to worry and think about their clothing. When they wake up in the morning, they can dress immediately. It may reduce the time spent standing in front of their closets and wondering what to wear that day. Moreover, they can not compare their clothing with other classmates', so they don't put a lot of emphasis on their appearances and ask their parents to buy many expensive clothes for them. They can save more energy to focus on academic performance or other activities.

Also, the uniform is a symbol for students, and it makes students more recognizable. When students wear uniforms outside of their school, people can easily tell at which school they study. If they have accidents or linger outside, people can inform their school as soon as possible so that students' behaviors are under control before they have the ability to make their own judgments. In addition, uniforms will help teacher recognize their students and prevent other strangers from entering campus to threaten students' safety.
